The Puritan movement originated in England in the 16th century. The Puritans were initially known as "separatists" because they believed that the Church of England was beyond reform and that they should separate from it. They were also known as "nonconformists" because they refused to conform to the rituals and ceremonies of the Anglican Church.

The Puritans believed in a form of Calvinism that emphasized the sovereignty of God and the depravity of man. They believed that salvation was only possible through God's grace and that it was predestined before the foundation of the world. The Puritans also believed in the importance of personal faith and the authority of the Bible. They sought to live a life of purity and holiness, according to the teachings of the Bible.

Puritan Migration to the New World

The Puritans began to migrate to the New World in the early 17th century. The first group of Puritans, known as the Pilgrims, sailed to America on the Mayflower in 1620. They established the Plymouth Colony in present-day

Massachusetts. The Pilgrims were followed by a larger group of Puritans who established the Massachusetts Bay Colony in 1630. The Massachusetts Bay Colony quickly became the most important Puritan colony in America.

The Puritans were motivated to migrate to the New World by a variety of factors, including religious persecution, economic opportunity, and a desire to establish a new society based on their own religious principles. The Puritans believed that they could create a utopia in the New World, a society that would be free from the corruptions of Europe.
