When selecting breeding stock, there are a few things you should keep in mind:

- Health: The health of your breeding stock is paramount. Make sure to select animals that are free of any diseases or parasites.
- Production: If you are interested in raising Toggenburg goats for milk production, you should select animals that have a good milk production history.
- Conformation: The conformation of your breeding stock is also important. Make sure to select animals that have good body structure and are free of any conformational defects.

Once you have selected your breeding stock, you can start the breeding process.

Toggenburg goats are typically bred in the fall. The gestation period for Toggenburg goats is about 150 days. During this time, it is important to provide your does with a high-quality diet and plenty of exercise.

Once your does have given birth, you will need to provide them with a clean and comfortable place to raise their kids. Kids should be fed colostrum within the first 24 hours of life. Colostrum is a nutrient-rich milk that helps to protect kids from disease.

After the first few days of life, kids can be fed a diet of milk replacer or goat's milk. Kids should be weaned from their mothers at around 8 weeks of age.

Toggenburg goats are relatively easy to care for. They are a hardy breed and can tolerate a variety of climates. However, there are a few things you should keep in mind to ensure the health and well-being of your goats:

- Nutrition: Toggenburg goats require a diet of high-quality hay, grain, and minerals. Make sure to provide your goats with plenty of fresh water at all times.
- Housing: Toggenburg goats need a clean and comfortable place to live. Their shelter should be well-ventilated and protected from the elements.
- Health care: Toggenburg goats are susceptible to a variety of diseases and parasites. Make sure to vaccinate your goats and provide them with regular deworming treatments.

Toggenburg goats are typically raised for milk production. However, they can also be raised for meat or fiber. If you are interested in raising Toggenburg goats for milk production, you will need to milk your does twice a day.

Toggenburg goats are a versatile breed that can be used for a variety of purposes. They are a good choice for small-scale farmers and homesteaders.

Raising Toggenburg goats can be a rewarding experience. These are a hardy and productive breed that is easy to care for. With proper care and management, your Toggenburg goats will provide you with years of enjoyment and productivity.
